

BUILDING YOUR RESUME

tools and tips for creating the best resume

WHAT IS A RESUME?

- A summary of your abilities and accomplishments relevant to your intended audience or career goals.
- An outline of your education, experience, skills, personal attributes and other background information.
- Your marketing piece, curated to speak to your audience.
- A demonstration of your qualifications for the type of position and employment you are seeking.
- Your opportunity to stand out from other applicants.
- Your first impression to an employer.
- Remember: the resume does not get you the job—it gets you the interview. In other words, you don't have to include every detail. Leave something to talk about at the interview.

TYPES OF RESUMES

Master Resume

It is important to always have one master resume for your personal files that is a record of all of your current and past experiences and accomplishments.

This master resume should never be used for any official position, but kept more as a record for yourself. The key to developing an outstanding resume is to tailor it to suit the specific position or opportunity for which you are applying. Choose carefully among the experiences and skills you have from your master resume, including those that match the qualifications listed. Leave out experiences that are unrelated.

Professional Resume

For employment and internship opportunities.

Length:

1–2 pages, recommended 1 page if still in school.

Format:

Start at the top with your name and contact information in a larger type face. Choose fonts and sizing wisely, as this will become your brand that carries from your resume to your cover letter and other professional materials. Stick to fonts that are clean, and not distracting or hard to read.

Includes:

Name and Contact Information, Education, Professional Experience with job descriptions and duties, Skills, Exhibitions (optional), Awards, Honors, etc. Each section below your name should be listed in reverse chronological order, with the most recent experience first. The professional resume is designed to highlight skills and work experience, so it is more descriptive than an artist resume for galleries (See artist resume below).

Artist Resume

For galleries and competitions.

Length:

1–2 pages, depending on stage of career and content

Format:

Follows the format of the Professional Resume, but not as descriptive.

Includes:

Name and Contact Information, Education, Exhibitions (Solo, Group), Performances, Bibliography (Articles or Reviews about you), Publications/Reviews by Artist, Collections, Awards, Commissions, Residencies, Fellowships, Grants, Competitions, Lectures, Exhibitions Curated, Affiliations, Memberships, Independent/Volunteer Activities, Art- Related Experience (The artist resume includes minimal descriptions. Instead, it is a chronological list of artistic accomplishments). Similar to Teaching CV, but shorter (see Teaching CV below).

Teaching CV

The Latin name for resume, Curriculum Vitae, is used most often in academic contexts.

Length:

Usually longer than a professional resume, short versions may be 2–3 pages, long versions for advanced professionals may be 4 or more pages.

Format:

Follows the format of the Professional Resume, but not as descriptive.

Includes:

Name and Contact Information, Education, Teaching Experience, Related Experience, Skills, Exhibitions (Solo, Group), Performances, Bibliography (Articles or Reviews about you), Publications/Reviews by Artist, Collections, Awards, Commissions, Residencies, Fellowships, Grants, Competitions, Lectures, Exhibitions Curated, Affiliations, Memberships, Independent/Volunteer Projects.

HOW TO BUILD YOUR RESUME

Style

Create a hierarchy and structure with your layout.

Potential employers will likely spend an average of 10 seconds on your resume, so make sure any relevant skills or experience are easy to spot! Use bold or larger typefaces to distinguish headings and put those sections of the resume that are most critical for the employer to read at the top.

Choose a style and format for listing employers, titles, dates and locations and stay consistent throughout the document.

This helps the employer locate information quickly and simply. Use font size, capitals, bold, italics and bullets to categorize, but don't overdo it!

When printing your resume, be sure to use a high quality laser printer.

Organization

Be specific with your information and include numbers and dates whenever possible.

You do not need to include months with years unless a position was held during one year for less than six months.

Aim to have the most relevant information in the top half of the page.

Once your resume is perfected, save a copy as an Adobe PDF file to capture all fonts and retain formatting.

When submitting a resume electronically or posting it on your website, always use the PDF version unless instructed otherwise. Always follow the employer's application instructions.

COMMON MISTAKES

Writing your resume as a narrative.

Do not use first person pronouns ("I" or "me") when listing your responsibilities (See examples in resume sample in this packet).

Using a generic resume for all of your applications.

Instead tailor your resume to your audience and be sure your skills line up with the position to which you are applying.

Listing your references.

Do not include names and contact information of your references on your resume. You only need to include references if requested by the employer or organization. You do NOT need to use the phrase "references available upon request." If references are requested, they should accompany your resume as a separate document with your letterhead at the top.

Not tailoring to audience.

Do not list skills or copious details that are not relevant to your audience. A resume is not your full history but a marketing piece for the parts that are relevant.

Not doing a photocopy test.

Make a black and white photocopy to ensure it is readable after copying. It is safe to assume an employer will likely always view your resume as a black and white photocopy.

Including too many pages in your resume.

Resumes should be 1 – 2 pages in length, depending on the stage of your career. We recommend one page for students. Always completely fill the page — no half pages. If you cannot fill two full pages, edit and condense the information to fit on one.

Listing experience in chronological order.

Always list experiences with your most recent experience first, in reverse chronological order (2022, 2021, 2020...).

Including your high school experience.

Only include high school experience if it is specifically relevant to your audience.

Content

Consider your audience when formatting your content and layout.

For example, if you are applying for a skills based position, put your skills section near the top of the resume.

Use action verbs to describe your experiences.

Avoid using the same verb twice. See the helpful list of action verbs later in this document as a good place to start.

Organize your responsibilities under each position in order of importance.

Use past tense for jobs which you are no longer working (Created).
Use present tense for current positions (Create).

Be concise when describing your experiences.

Use bullets or short paragraphs that are descriptive and relevant to the position.

Grammar and spelling

Proofread and edit your materials several times to eliminate all errors.

Use spell check or apps like Grammarly, especially when using InDesign (Edit > Spelling > Check Spelling).

Have someone proofread your resume for you.

They may catch mistakes you missed!

The Career Development staff can give you advice and tips to improve your materials.

Spelling and formatting errors.

All it takes is one mistake to deter an employer from calling you. Always spell check and proofread to catch errors.

Punctuation, capitalization and font style are not consistent long-winded descriptions.

Break up descriptions into bullets or short paragraphs.

Not listing degree.

Always include the degree in addition to your major or program. Ex. BFA Candidate in Illustration, expected 2020.

Missing information.

Make sure to be consistent throughout your resume. Each item should include the same details including titles, locations, organization names, and dates.
